AQUITAINE

AQUITAINE STORY

The history of Aquitaine is really a story of a struggle for love and power. While most would assume that power struggles center around men and their egos, this story, in fact, is about a woman; Eleanor of Aquitaine. The life of this dynamic woman changed the course of the wine world forever.

At the young age of 15, Eleanor married Louis VII, the King of France. With the commencement of this marriage, she gained control of a large territory, from the River Loire to the Pyrenees Mountains.

By the age of 19, Eleanor grew quite comfortable and confident in her role as the Queen of France. So much so that she and 300 female crusaders dressed in full armor ready to fight for their beliefs.

After a few years, Eleanor grew distant from her husband in both political and ideological beliefs. In addition, Louis VII's expectation of having a son never came to fruition thus leading to the annulment of their marriage.

Less than one year after separating from Louis VII, Eleanor of Aquitaine, at age 30, found and married her second love, Henry II, who eventually became the King of England. This marriage between Eleanor and Henry II solidified the relationship between the Aquitaine region and England. Aquitaine and its surrounding areas, especially Gaillac and Bergerac, although shipped from Bordeaux, became the chief export wines from France and consequently, England became the world's top importer and consumer of Aquitaine wines. It wasn't until the late 1700's that Bordeaux's wines were anywhere near the quality of those from Aquitaine.

The grapes of the Aquitaine and Bordeaux regions eventually spread throughout the winegrowing world reaching all the way to South America and the United States, making them the most recognized varieties across the globe. Even Thomas Jefferson was a well-known Bordeaux aficionado.

So with this very brief and truncated history, Aquitaine and its inheritors have given this precious gift of wine for us to enjoy!
